

Riseguide Reputation Scorecard

Independent weekly reputation analysis · July 6, 2026

KEYWORDS ANALYSED

- riseguide
- riseguide app
- riseguide reviews

COMPOSITE SCORE

July 6, 2026

5.4_{/10}

▼ -0.1

was 5.5 · June 29, 2026

REVIEW PLATFORM SCORES

Trustpilot

4.4

21,934 reviews

Apple App Store

4.6

16,120 reviews

Google Play

4.1

3,386 reviews

Reviews.io

4.7

243 reviews

RealReviews.io

4.4

97 reviews

BBB

13

11 unresolved / 3 yr

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY · THIS WEEK VS LAST WEEK

			LAST WEEK	CURRENT	Δ
01	Product Quality		7.3 _{/10}	7.2 _{/10}	▼ -0.1
02	Customer Service		5.8 _{/10}	5.7 _{/10}	▼ -0.1
03	User Feedback		6.7 _{/10}	6.6 _{/10}	▼ -0.1
04	Billing Transparency		3.5 _{/10}	3.2 _{/10}	▼ -0.3
05	Brand Trust & Legitimacy		4.3 _{/10}	4.4 _{/10}	▲ +0.1

▲ TOP IMPROVEMENTS THIS WEEK

05 Brand Trust & Legitimacy

4.4_{/10} ▲ +0.1

Online presence consistency — The search footprint rebounded this week after last week's slide. Company-owned pages reclaimed slots — riseguide.com and its subdomains now hold about seven of the top thirty results, up from four — and the skeptical Reddit thread that had been sitting third dropped out of the top results entirely. Where RiseGuide controls the message the branding stays perfectly consistent across the website, both stores, Trustpilot and directories; this week it also controls more of the search real estate.

▼ TOP DECLINES THIS WEEK

01 Product Quality

7.2_{/10} ▼ -0.1

Accessibility & consistency — Stability re-entered the conversation this week after a quiet spring. Bug and performance mentions rose on both stores — App Store performance mentions climbed from 7 to 10 and bugs from 2 to 5, while Google Play performance mentions jumped from 2 to 8. The ratings on those reviews stayed middling rather than damning, so this isn't a regression alarm — but a topic that had fully receded is back on the board, and that's the early warning worth heeding.

02 Customer Service

5.7_{/10} ▼ -0.1

Response speed & quality — The breakout support story is now fully unwound. After cooling last week, App Store reviews mentioning customer support fell to zero this week (from five), and Google Play barely registered it. This isn't a drop in quality — it's the team receding from the conversation entirely, confirming the spring surge was a one-off event rather than a new baseline. Support is currently neither a headline strength nor a live complaint.

03 User Feedback

6.6_{/10} ▼ -0.1

Sentiment & platform consistency — After weeks of the two app stores reading almost identically, they split this week — and in opposite directions. Google Play strengthened, with positive sentiment rising to about 79% and its negative share falling, while the App Store softened: one-star reviews doubled from 7 to 14 and dissatisfied-user mentions jumped from 5 to 9 at barely one star. The blended average looks stable, but underneath it the two platforms are pulling apart, and the App Store is the side that's slipping.

04 Billing Transparency

3.2_{/10} ▼ -0.3

Hidden / recurring charges — This was already the worst-scoring billing signal, and this week the volume behind it surged — App Store payment complaints doubled to 15 at 1.3 stars. The language is unchanged and unambiguous: 'auto debit your account without your consent,' 'a really nasty scam:

after my immediate cancellation, 49.99 euros was still debited monthly.' These are people who feel robbed, not confused, and there are simply more of them this week. The substance hasn't moved in months; the vocabulary and the volume both keep climbing.

01

Product Quality

▼ -0.1

7.2/10

The product keeps earning love wherever checkout doesn't get in the way — but this week the App Store surfaced something that had gone quiet since spring: bug and speed complaints reappeared on both stores. Nothing broke — the ratings on those reviews stayed middling, not damning — but stability, which had dropped out of the conversation entirely, is being talked about again. Meanwhile the 'it's all AI-generated' accusation crossed platforms, now showing up in Google Play alongside the older 'rehashed content' gripe. The satisfied-user core is intact; the noise around its edges is getting a little louder.

Marketing vs realityMixed · 6.5

The promise-versus-reality gap is holding, but the complaint keeps mutating and spreading. The 'it's all AI-generated' accusation that started on one store now appears on Google Play too — one reviewer dismissed the lessons as 'AI-generated content (questionable Italian grammar).' It's still a handful of voices against a solid five-star core, with 64 of 100 App Store reviews and 47 of 76 Google Play reviews landing at five stars this week, so the score holds. But the framing attacks credibility rather than quality, and it's worth watching.

Unique value propositionHealthy · 7.5

The structured-journey format remains what people reach for when they praise the app, and it's still the densest positive theme in the entire dataset — 67 App Store reviews and 31 Google Play reviews this week landed in the satisfied-user bucket, averaging 4.7 stars. Mentions eased slightly from last week's level, but the underlying signal is unchanged: people who finish the journey rate it near-perfect. The differentiator is real and durable, and nothing this week threatened it.

Accessibility & consistencyHealthy · 7.5

▼ -0.5

After a spring in which speed and stability had gone quiet, they're back on the board — bug and performance mentions rose on both stores this week, with App Store performance mentions up from 7 to 10 and Google Play from 2 to 8. The ratings on those reviews stayed middling rather than damning, so this isn't a regression alarm. But a topic that had fully receded is being discussed again, and catching whether it's noise or an early trend is the cheap move now.

02

Customer Service

▼ -0.1

5.7/10

Support has now completed its round trip — the breakout month is fully behind us. App Store reviews stopped mentioning customer support at all this week, which is neither good news nor bad: the team is back to being invisible background rather than a talked-about strength. What hasn't changed is the underlying shape — every unhappy customer still gets a reply on every platform, but a reply isn't a resolution, and this week's 'cancelled but charged anyway, then refused a refund' reviews prove the gap is still open. The whole operation still rides on hand-written email, with no live chat or phone fallback.

Support channel availabilityMixed · 6

Coverage is unchanged — email and the help portal still carry every conversation, with no live chat or phone line anywhere. The model holds while volume is manageable, but it has no surge capacity: when billing complaints spike, as they did this week, the same inbox absorbs all of it. The next improvement that would actually move this score is a tooling investment, not another support hire.

Response speed & qualityMixed · 6

▼ -0.5

The breakout support story is now fully unwound. After cooling last week, App Store reviews mentioning customer support fell to zero this week — down from five — and Google Play barely registered it. That's not a decline in quality but a receding from the conversation, confirming the spring surge was a one-off rather than a step change. Replies stay prompt when they're needed; support is simply no longer a topic reviewers raise, for praise or complaint.

Complaint resolution rateMixed · 5

The 'everyone hears back' promise held perfectly again — every negative review across the App Store, Google Play and Trustpilot drew a company reply this week. But answering still isn't closing: this week's reviews include a customer who cancelled during a trial and was charged 49.99 euros monthly anyway, and another told there would be no refund. Responsiveness is a solved problem; turning a reply into a resolved outcome is not, and that gap is where the billing anger pools.

03

User Feedback

▼ -0.1

6.6/10

Volume keeps compounding and the ratings under it are steady-to-rising — the healthy part of the story is intact. But the two app stores split this week after moving in lockstep for weeks: Google Play strengthened while the App Store softened, its one-star reviews doubling. And the authenticity asterisk changed character — the compliance flags that returned last week doubled again this week, and they've shifted from 'the glowing reviews are AI-fakes' to blunt fraud accusations. The numbers are genuine; the split beneath them and the flags around them are what needs managing.

Review volume & rating

Healthy · 8.2

▲ +0.3

Growth stayed broad and the ratings under it held or improved — the clean version of this picture. Trustpilot added roughly 480 reviews this week, a 2.2% increase, while holding at 4.4 stars; Google Play added about 110 reviews and actually ticked up to 4.08; and the App Store climbed past 16,100 reviews at 4.6. When volume rises this steadily without dragging the rating down, it's the closest thing to organic-feeling momentum the dashboard shows.

Sentiment & platform consistency

Mixed · 5.5

▼ -0.5

After weeks of the two app stores reading almost identically, they diverged this week — and in opposite directions. Google Play strengthened, with positive sentiment climbing to about 79% and its negative share falling, while the App Store softened: its one-star reviews doubled from 7 to 14 and dissatisfied-user mentions rose from 5 to 9 at barely one star. The blended average looks stable, but underneath it the platforms are pulling apart, with the App Store the side that's slipping.

Review authenticity signals

Mixed · 4.5

The reliance on solicited reviews eased slightly — about 96% of Trustpilot reviews still came from company invitations, down a touch — but the compliance flags that returned last week doubled to four this week, and their character changed. Where recent flags alleged AI-fabricated reviews, this week's are blunt fraud accusations: 'They are SCAM,' 'auto debit without consent.' The independent tracker RealReviews still places RiseGuide mid-pack at 4.4 stars. Whether or not the flags are upheld, they're what most directly undercuts an invited-heavy average.

Company responsiveness to reviews

Healthy · 8.3

Still the cleanest signal in the scorecard. Every negative review on the App Store, Google Play and Trustpilot received a company reply this week, and overall reply coverage held at 100% across all three platforms. Whatever else is contested about how RiseGuide's reviews are collected, no unhappy customer is being left unanswered — and that consistency is a genuine, defensible strength that costs the brand nothing to maintain.

Billing is still the brand's deepest wound, and this week it bled hardest on the App Store, where pricing and payment complaints roughly doubled — the exact reviews that read 'auto debit without consent,' 'impossible to cancel,' and '49.99 euros debited monthly after I cancelled.' Google Play's pricing gripes eased, but that's the only relief in the picture. The common thread through the angriest reviews is a single missing piece: there's no cancel button in the app, so users feel trapped in the renewal they're then billed for. This is a product gap generating fraud-grade anger, not a disclosure nuance.

Price disclosure

Mixed · 4.5

▼ -0.5

The two stores flipped this week. App Store pricing complaints more than doubled — from 8 to 17 — averaging 1.7 stars, while Google Play's eased from 10 to 5. The relief on one platform doesn't offset the surge on the other, because the App Store is now where both the volume and the fury live. Users keep describing a one-time price that quietly turned recurring: 'I made a purchase of 19.99 pounds... at no time did it state I'd have to keep paying continuously.'

Hidden / recurring charges

Critical · 2

▼ -0.5

This was already the worst-scoring billing signal, and this week the volume behind it surged — App Store payment complaints doubled to 15 at 1.3 stars. The language is unchanged and blunt: 'auto debit your account without your consent,' 'a really nasty scam: after my immediate cancellation, 49.99 euros was still debited monthly.' These are people who feel robbed, not misinformed, and there are simply more of them this week. The single highest-leverage fix — an explicit charge-confirmation step before purchase — still hasn't shipped.

Ease of cancellation

Mixed · 4

▼ -0.5

The missing in-app cancel button is now the single mechanism tying the billing complaints together. Reviewer after reviewer this week: 'Auto subscribes and it's impossible to cancel,' 'no cancellation/refund option,' 'it's not showing up in my subscriptions.' The help guide still rescues whoever finds it, but the product gap it can't close is what turns a billing surprise into a fraud accusation. Linking the guide from the in-app billing screen is the cheap half of the fix; building a real in-app cancel path is the half that matters.

UI dark patterns

Critical · 2.3

The pattern the company itself acknowledges — charging before a clearly stated renewal date with no email receipt — is generating the same angry reviews at higher volume this week, with auto-renewal warnings resurfacing on Trustpilot and both stores. Compliance flags also doubled to four this cycle, though these are billing-fraud accusations rather than content ones. The perception that the checkout is engineered against the user is hardening, not fading, and the rising complaint count is the proof.

Refund policy clarity & enforcement

Critical · 3

Refunds still run on negotiation, not policy. This week a customer who cancelled during a trial was charged monthly anyway and told the renewal wouldn't be refunded, while another is 'still waiting for a response regarding a refund.' With no refund policy published on the website, every outcome depends on which agent happens to answer. A clear, public refund policy remains the cheapest credibility fix anywhere in this dimension — and its absence is what keeps every refund a fresh argument.

The 'is this legit?' question is still answered mostly by outsiders — but this week the brand quietly won back ground it had lost. Company-owned pages reclaimed search slots (riseguide.com and its subdomains now hold about seven of the top results), and the skeptical Reddit thread dropped out of the top three. Working against that: the compliance flags on Trustpilot doubled, and the 'is this a scam?' video still sits above 15,000 views atop comment sections far more skeptical than the creators who made them. The founder remains invisible — still the single most fixable line in the entire scorecard.

Company age & history

Critical · 3

Still young and still faceless. The company is roughly two years old and the app about six months, and the only public record of who runs it remains a name on business-registration filings. Age will eventually harden into credibility on its own, but the one lever available today — a real founder story attached to a real person — still hasn't been pulled.

Legal & brand identity alignmer

Mixed · 5

Two forces cancelled out this week. On the negative side, the compliance flags on Trustpilot doubled to four and shifted from AI-fabrication claims to blunt fraud accusations ('They are SCAM,' 'pure fake'). On the positive side, no scam-flagging site cracked the top search results and the skeptical Reddit thread actually fell out of the top three. It's neither a fraud finding nor a clean bill of health — the score holds while the mix churns underneath it.

Third-party recognition

Mixed · 4.7

Independent coverage is still a real asset — several 'is it worth it?' reviews rank on the first page and the app-overview video has been seen over 300,000 times — and creator sentiment even rose this week. But the gap between creators and their viewers is the story: sampled videos ran about 73% positive while their comment sections sat near 46%, with one top comment snapping, 'just say it as it is... honest review and no word that this is an advertisement... is this even legal?' The scam-framed video still holds above 15,000 views.

Leadership transparency

Critical · 3

The longest-running flat line in the report. No founder bio, no About page, no leadership presence anywhere in this week's search results, yet again. With reviewers now openly accusing the brand of fraud and fabricated reviews, the absence of a named, photographed person to stand behind the product isn't a missing nicety — it's the void those accusations rush to fill. A short founder bio with a real photo remains the single highest score-per-effort fix anywhere in this scorecard.

Online presence consistencyMixed · 6.3*▲ +0.3

The search footprint rebounded this week after last week's slide. Company-owned pages reclaimed slots — riseguide.com and its subdomains now hold about seven of the top thirty results, up from four — and the skeptical Reddit thread that had been sitting third dropped out of the top results entirely. Where RiseGuide controls the message, the branding stays perfectly consistent across the website, both stores, Trustpilot and directories; this week it also won back some of the search real estate it had ceded.